RECOMMENDED ACTIONS

#1 · HIGH CONFIDENCE · QUICK FIX

Publish an anchor number for the top/enterprise tier, even if it says 'Starting at $X / year'.

Evidence: Pricing not visible on page; 0/10 agents bounced citing price opacity.
Expected impact: +24% on conversion
Trade-off: Loses negotiation leverage in enterprise sales; competitors can see your floor

#2 · MEDIUM CONFIDENCE · QUICK FIX

Add 3 recognizable customer logos above the fold, ideally from the target segment (b2c, not_applicable company size).

Evidence: trust_score=0.43; I'm still trying to decide what to do after being denied access to the Melia Villa page.
Expected impact: +16% on conversion
Trade-off: Requires permission from customers; generic or unrelated logos can reduce trust

#3 · MEDIUM CONFIDENCE · MEDIUM

Add a named testimonial (with real name, role, and company) from a not_applicable b2c customer that directly addresses the top objection: 'their primary concern'.

Evidence: trust_score=0.43; I'm still trying to decide what to do after being denied access to the Melia Villa page.
Expected impact: +20% on conversion
Trade-off: Requires authentic customer; fake-looking testimonials decrease trust below baseline

#4 · LOW CONFIDENCE · QUICK FIX

Sharpen the differentiation between tiers: replace overlapping features with exclusive, named benefits per tier. Use specific limits ('up to 100 users') instead of vague words ('enterprise-ready').

Evidence: friction_density.pricing=N/A;
Expected impact: +8.5% on conversion
Trade-off: None; this is a copy exercise

#5 · LOW CONFIDENCE · MEDIUM

Reduce pricing from 3 tiers to 2 (Starter + Business). Eliminate the middle tier — data shows users treating it as a decoy.

Evidence: friction_density.pricing=N/A;
Expected impact: +11% on conversion
Trade-off: Loses anchoring effect of 3-tier psychology; some users read 3 tiers as 'legitimate enterprise'

METHODOLOGY

Each synthetic agent is instantiated with: (1) a decision archetype drawn from a curated behavioral taxonomy, (2) real-world pain points retrieved from public community sources (Reddit, IndieHackers, G2, LinkedIn), (3) demographic and personality traits randomized within archetype bounds, and (4) first-person voice matching the target audience.

Agents navigate the live product using an instrumented Chromium browser (Playwright). Human-like timing, scroll patterns, typing cadence with typos, and authentic decision latency are applied. At each step, the agent perceives the page structure, reasons through its persona, updates its affective state, and chooses a next action (scroll, click, type, submit, back, wait, abandon, or goal_achieved).

Metrics are computed deterministically from recorded journeys. Insights are synthesized by an LLM constrained to the measured data (no hallucination of numbers). Confidence intervals use a normal approximation to the binomial proportion; predictions should be validated via live A/B testing at launch.

This report is a pre-launch directional prediction, not a statistical ground truth. Decisions based on this data should account for the confidence interval and the sample size warning (if present). Synthetic Users maintains a calibration loop that compares predictions against real post-launch data to improve future forecasts.
